THE WORK OF WAR SAVINGS SOCIETIES

To promote the systematic saving of money by groups is the purpose behind the War Savings Society. Experience shows that people through combination often do better work than they do individually, the individual resolution being strengthened by that of others.

Ten or more persons may organize themselves into a War Savings Society. A charter is issued by the National War Savings Committee to each such society, this being official recognition. Once formed effort is directed towards popularizing saving and inducing as many persons as possible to buy War Savings and Thrift Stamps.

Organizations such as the Daughters of the Empire, Red Cross Societies, the Women's Grain Growers, Home Makers' clubs and fraternal and benevolent bodies generally should form War Savings Societies in their own midst. Schools, factories and large business concerns should do likewise. There is no expense in connection with the work. It costs nothing and pays well.

Sims' Flag Caused Excitement.

Most harmonious is the working of the two navies (British and American). Admiralty House is quite a home for the Americans, and, needless to say, the British vice-admiral, with his years of sea life, is an interesting figure to the young officers from the United States. So close is the co-operation of the two services that when the British vice-admiral was on board the ship, Admiral Sims, the senior American naval officer, hoisted his flag at Queenstown, and through the island went the rumor that Ireland had been handed over to the United States!—The London Times.

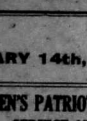
WOMEN'S PATRIOTIC SERVICE AND RED CROSS WORK

Through the "U. E. Loyalist" Chapter, I.O.D.E.



Mrs. J. T. Empey of R. M. D. No. 3, Napanee, has again placed us much in her debt by sending in one day last week a splendid parcel of clothing for the French repatries, which will surely receive warm welcome from these poor people, and is very greatly appreciated by the Daughters of the Empire and their Committee, as everything Mrs. Empey sends us is of such good quality, so well selected, and so beautifully made, and we desire herewith to express our warmest thanks to Mrs. Empey for her very kind donation.

Another greatly appreciated donation received on the same day came from Miss Shorey, (Mrs. George Shorey's neice) Palace road, Napanee, who so kindly sent us a number of little girls' dresses, petticoats, etc., so well and cleverly made out of her own materials. These will certainly bring joy to the hearts of the little French girls for whom they are intended, and we desire herewith to express to Miss Shorey our deep sense of indebtedness to her for her thoughtful kindness. Miss Shorey made some little time since some French smocks for children, from a French pattern, which will give to these little ones garments which they are accustomed to wear.

Any appeal for aid to the striken peoples of the Allied nations should meet with a very ready response by all those fortunate enough to be outside or beyond the zone of military operations, and such appeal should be felt most strongly by all those who saw the thrilling and moving production of "Hearts of the World" and there were hundreds who had this opportunity, as these touching and often terrible scenes brought more vividly and convincingly before our people the awful suffering and [illegible] against the French and other Allies by a barbarous and ruthless foe, with greater force than any amount of reading, or number of recitals.

Read in last week's "Express" the description of the return of the innocents to France, and then think if it is not our evident duty to help these unfortunates by every means in our power, actively and financially.

Perhaps those touching little verses relating to these stricken children whose childhood has been marred and ruined, as well as their homes, will now have a new and more potent meaning:

"My children in their sheltered garden play
With sound of laughter and with footsteps fleet;—
There was a garden bloomed in France one day
As cool and sweet,

Now burned and black and desolate And they
Who ran and laughed there.
Little tired feet
You stumble now along a weary way
By mothers in whose hearts all sorrows meet.

My children in their sheltered garden play,
With sound of laughter and with footsteps fleet;—
But, O Dear God, those little, tired feet
That stumble on a road in France to-day!"

HUNS TO HAVE PRESIDENT

Dr. Edward David Heads New Republic.

New Assembly Elected In Germany Will Drop the Title "Imperial" — Assembly Has Been Directed to Give Attention to the Preparation of Constitution to Consider Soon.

WEIMAR, Feb. 11.—Dr. Edward David, for many years one of the leaders of the German Social Democratic party, was almost unanimously elected President of the German National Assembly. Dr. David is one of the Under-Secretaries of State for Foreign Affairs.

Dr. David received 374 out of a total of 399 votes, the Independent Socialists withholding their votes. Voting was by ballot and there was considerable confusion when delegates crowded in the narrow aisles of the theatre to place their votes in the ballot boxes.

Dr. David's speech was little more than a repetition of the words of Chancellor Ebert on Tuesday, especially when he referred to Alsace-Lorraine and the union of the state with Germany, both of these references being loudly cheered.

Germany, he said, could earn the confidence of the world only by rapid creative work and must understand how to bridge the gulf to co-operative understanding. His greeting to Alsace-Lorraine and the declaration that Germany would not stop insisting that it have the right of self-determination evoked a great ovation, as did his reference to the Austrians, whom he said, he hoped to be able to welcome as colleagues.

The Assembly passed the first reading of the provisional constitution by acclamation. The main portion of the Assembly's time was devoted to a speech by Hugo Preuss, the Secretary of the Interior, who had been charged in drafting the constitution. The Minister explained the character of the provisions of the instrument, from which the Assembly is to derive its powers as a law-making body.

The provisional constitution empowers the Assembly to adopt a permanent constitution.

It provides for the choosing of a national president by a majority vote and for the creation of a "Committee of State," which shall occupy the position of a quasi-second chamber.

The provisional constitution makes no attempt to anticipate or limit the future permanent constitution, excepting as to one vital detail. This is a provision that the territory of the German state shall not be altered without their consent. This is obviously the Government's method of meeting the opposition evoked by the earlier reports that a division of Prussia was contemplated.

Sentiment is fairly crystallized, after various party caucuses, in favor of transferring the National Assembly to Berlin after the Easter holidays. It is probable that there will be an adjournment on April 11, after which the President will call upon the Assembly to reconvene in Berlin. The Independent Socialists favor an immediate transfer, but stand alone in this demand.

The provisional powers probably will be entrusted to a Cabinet, instead of "Minister of State," as at present, a majority of them will be without portfolios, even though additional portfolios be created. The Finance Ministry will be divided into two departments, one for special technical details, and to deal with loans, and the other to be the department of the Imperial Treasury, for the administration of socialized public works. It is possible that a Labor Ministry will be created. A Demobilization Ministry and an Economic Ministry are believed to be certain of formation, in addition to the reformation of the Imperial Treasury Department.

Twelve former residents of Alsace, including Gen. Gen. Scheuch, former Prussian War Minister, have arrived in Weimar. They were chosen delegates to the National Assembly by numerous Alsatian refugees, and they came to offset, as far as possible, the French prohibition against elections in Alsace, having conducted a make-shift election by mail.

Whether these delegates shall have a vote in or be received by the National Assembly has not been decided, but they will in any event have an opportunity to report on conditions in Alsace.

UNIFORMITY IS DESIRED

Terms for Ontario Deserters Are Too Long.

Some Sentences May Be Reduced, But on the Other Hand Leniency In Quebec Will Be Checked—Judge Claims That He Acted Upon Instructions Received From Officials at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Feb. 11.—Certain problems which arise out of the enforcement of the Military Service Act are understood to be engaging the attention of the Government. Among them is said to be the lack of uniformity in sentences which have been imposed by the interpretations of the act or failure to comply with its requirements. While there have been complaints that unduly light sentences have been imposed in some cases, it has also been represented that excessively severe punishments have been inflicted. It is said that in some cases these sentences were imposed largely as examples to other men. It is being proposed, therefore, that a number of these sentences to long terms of imprisonment be reduced. Offences under the act fall into some six or eight categories and it has been argued that there should be some uniformity as between sentences for the same offence throughout the country.

Action Regarding Quebec.

QUEBEC, Feb. 11.—A radical change in the proceedings against absentees under the Military Service Act has been made in the police court, according to a statement issued from the office of the police court to the Canadian Press. So far absentees have been let off with a nominal fine of $1 and $4 costs, but it appears protests entered by Ontario papers and officials have brought the matter authoritatively to change the mode of proceedings. It is said that, hereafter, absentees will first be summoned before the police court, where they will appear their excuses, which will then be forwarded to the Federal Department of Justice, who will decide the penalty to be imposed.

Judge Charles Langelier of the Police Court admitted that such an order had been received from Ottawa, necessitating a change in the proceedings so far as absentees under the Military Service Act are concerned. Judge Langelier read from a clipping of a Toronto paper wherein the registrar for the Military Service Act in Toronto District, said he saw nothing in the instructions from the Federal Department of Justice allowing judges and magistrates to let off with light fines absentees under the Military Service Act. Judge Langelier expressed his surprise at such a statement.

"I may tell you," stated Judge Langelier, "that what I have done in the absentee cases has been strictly under written instructions I received from the Federal Department of Justice."

Questioned farther on the matter, Judge Langelier said: "I cannot go into details of the reasons given by the Federal Department of Justice for letting off absentees with light fines, but I acted under the above-mentioned written instructions from Ottawa."

BOLSHEVIKI FACE CRISIS.

Trotsky Shows Fight, But Lenine Is Pessimistic.

WARSAW, Feb. 11.—Rumors of the evacuation of Petrograd by the Bolshevists do not find confirmation here, but reports of the transportation of the capital has been an ever-present possibility in their minds for some time. Travelers say the crisis of the Bolshevist rule is at hand, and the high priests of the craft in their special manners.

Trotsky is almost entirely has given himself over to military affairs and the organization of the army. He has uniform and is said to be brave and is little seen except when he addresses meetings or as he flashes rapidly through the streets of Moscow in his fine motor car.

Zinowieff, the Petrograd member of the triumvirate, passes his spare time writing documents and making speeches against all the heads of nations and the political leaders of all countries, including Premier Lloyd George, Henderson, Clemenceau, Poincare, Pilsudski, Sonnino, Scheidemann and Renaudel, and is said to have a ridiculous flood of denunciation which overflows into the Bolshevist organs. The epithet "Wolf" is applied to Lloyd George, Wieff and others against Henderson. Lloyd George is termed a tyrant, Renaudel is called a traitor, and Wilson is referred to as a bigot or preacher. In one of Zinowieff's speeches President Wilson is called "the bigot, who believes in the absurdest things, such as the existence of God."

Lenine, on the contrary, has become pessimistic of the Bolshevist future, and openly declares another regime probable before long in Russia. Speaking of the Bolshevist rule he said: "It is, after all, only an attempt, a trial"; and in another speech, "It will have to be succeeded by another." He also declared that amidst us Communists there are many excellent persons, but we cannot demand, we are only the ones to instigate and lead the world's new life"; and again in another significant sentence, "The old economic regime should be succeeded by persons and other persons of value for their intelligence, and they must be invited to join us in the work."

Liebknecht's and Rosa Luxemburg's death was a great blow to the Bolshevist leaders.

Black Plague Is Now Raging.

GERMANS MUST DISARM

More Drastic Terms Proposed by the Allies.

New Documents Secured Prove that Tessons Plotted to Destroy French Industries — Problem Caused by Effort of Allied Governments to Send More Foodstuffs to Starving Enemies.

PARIS, Feb. 11. — The Supreme War Council in which Marshal Foch and other military commanders sit with the Council of the Great Powers, continued Monday the discussion of the terms for the renewing of the German armistice, without reaching a decision. At the same time the League of Nations Commission virtually completed the final draft of that project, ensuring its presentation at a plenary session the latter part of the week.

The discussion of the armistice took a wide range, including the failure to execute some of the clauses of the armistice, notably the blockade and the use of enemy merchant shipping. But the main issue turned on a series of proposals of a rather drastic nature, designed to place the enemy beyond the possibility of rearming and renewing the conflict.

From the French standpoint the menace of such renewal is not past, and it is urged as a matter of foresight that the safeguards be established. What these safeguards are has not been disclosed, but it is generally understood that they include the limitation of the production of field and heavy guns now on hand, also some limitation of the military organization which is to be of police service.

While some of the military commanders take the view that radical measures are needed to assure the Allies, particularly France, against a renewal of German attack, the civilian views tend to place reliance on economic measures as the best means of averting any renewal of enemy activity.

Besides the discussion of the armistice terms, M. Klotz, the French Minister of Finance, presented documents of the German General Staff showing a systematic plan to destroy French industries as well as a military measure, but as a means to promote German industrial interests. These documents were referred to the Economic Conference recently established.

Despite the optimistic reports in circulation, from which it appeared that a definite program for getting foodstuffs to Germany on a permanent basis had been drawn up by the Allies, further enquiry revealed the fact that the measures adopted are merely of a temporary nature.

The decision of the Allies, promulgated through the Inter-Allied Food Commission at Spa, is now shown to be a promise to feed Germany with only enough food for a couple of weeks. After that period no further shipments have been arranged for. Thus the action taken is seen to be of a makeshift character designed to relieve the immediate distress that the promise to keep them from starvation, provided they keep themselves from anarchy, will be fulfilled.

The problem in the words of a very distinguished student of the situation, Professor Charles Seignobos, is "the outstanding obstacle to the formulation of a method for relieving the food shortage in Germany in the difficulty of bringing about a more extracting payment for the food sold to the Germans."

The Allied Governments and the United States refuse to permit any enemy power to devote to purchase of foodstuffs gold or other assets, including such collateral as liens on industrial plant, which might be levied upon for war indemnities. Even with the German pay for their food through private loans floated in the United States by individual American firms, the effect of the blockade and regulations governing commercial relations with the enemy.

To pay for the bacon and milk bought in England, Germany has been accorded by the Supreme Council from her negotiated assets, of which part is in gold and a part in acceptable securities. As objection has been raised by some of the Governments represented to the removal of German gold or collateral from the continent of Europe, it is likely that this sum will be turned over by the British in exchange for other securities to the French and Belgians to assist in restoring the devastated regions.

Admiralty Would Scrap Subs.

LONDON, Feb. 11. — With reference to the question of scrapping submarines which has been before the Paris Conference. The Chronicle learns that the authority that the British Admiralty is strongly in favor of the total prohibition of submarines and of the use of submarines in warfare.

This naturally would be subject to a general international agreement, and to the right of guarantees and safeguards. The attitude of the British navy has all the more point, says the Chronicle, because during the war it has been in view of the fact that this country is far ahead of all other nations in regard to the actual construction of submarines and of their potential production.

No Need of Compulsory Education.

QUEBEC, Feb. 11. — One of the documents forwarded to the Provincial Government in connection with the resolution in the proposal to establish compulsory education throughout Quebec probably will be deemed as ammunition by both sides on the question.

The document, which has been forwarded to the Legislature by the parish priest of St. Hilaire, in the county of Charlevoix, is a petition against the adoption of any form of compulsion in educational matters.

The petition is supported by about thirty parishioners. Of these fifteen did not sign their names. Each marked his "croix."

How Star Men Cover World News Events

When the Titanic was sunk, The Toronto Daily Star rushed seven members of the staff to New York to "cover" the story. When Ulster threatened rebellion, three Star men travelled 4,000 miles to get the facts. When the Halifax explosion occurred, a small army of photographers and writers went to get the story.

The Star policy is to cover big events in a big way.

To cover the war meant not only to tell what was happening every hour, but to explain the significance of each event. The occasion demanded skilled men; correspondents who could get news and interpret it, and others—war experts—who could piece together the happenings on the battlefields and in the capitals and weigh them all for the benefit of the reader.

The Toronto Daily Star Has the Latest News Service in Ontario

Of such experts, Hilaire Belloc, was the most noted in Great Britain, and Frank H. Simonds in America. So because The Toronto Daily Star "covers big events in a big way," it retained these two foremost reviewers to interpret the strategy and politics of war.

The Daily Star's Peace Conference despatches are exceptionally complete. The service of the Canadian Press and the Canadian Associated Press—alone considered sufficient by many Canadian newspapers—are supplemented in The Star by cables from the following and other exclusive correspondents:

In the Capitals of Europe

E. Percy Noel	Lowell Mellett	William Philip Simms
Webb Miller	Paul Ayres Rockwell	Frank J. Taylor
Paul Scott Mowrer	Junius B. Wood	Fred S. Ferguson

and the full service of the United Press and of the "Chicago News." The Toronto Daily Star readers are assured not only first news of what is happening in the world, but clear and authoritative explanations as to what the happenings mean.

Tired Nervous Mothers

Should Profit by the Experience of These Two Women

Buffalo, N. Y.—"I am the mother of four children, and for nearly three years I suffered from a female trouble with pains in my back and side, and a general weakness. I had professional attendance most of that time but did not seem to get well. As a last resort I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which I had seen advertised in the newspapers, and in two weeks noticed a marked improvement. I continued its use and am now free from pain and able to do all my housework."—Mrs. B. B. Zielinska, 205 Weiss Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Portland, Ind.—"I had a displacement and suffered so badly from it at times I could not be on my feet at all. I was all run down and so weak I could not do my housework, and could not sleep. I broke down at night. I took treatments from a physician but they did not help me. My Aunt recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I tried it and now I am strong and well again and do my own work and I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound the credit."—Mrs. Josephine Kimble, 935 West Race Street, Portland, Ind.

J. Ramsay MacDonald Is Condemned by Many People But Remains a Labor Leader

IN considering the part that Labor has played in the British elections, and is to play in the period of reconstruction that is coming, it is impossible to ignore J. Ramsay Macdonald. Perhaps there is no man at whose head more uncomplimentary epithets have been hurled during the war than this advocate of evolutionary Socialism. Yet he is a man who commands wide influence in the Labor party, and despite his pacifist activities and his pronounced socialistic creed, he is not a "Bolshevist," or one who advises revolutionary methods. If he were, of course, he would not be enjoying his present position as member of the British House of Commons.

Macdonald was born in the little Scotch hamlet of Lossiemouth not far from the border, in 1866. His mother came of a good family, but the world-ly circumstances of his parents was not far removed from absolute poverty. His father was a farm laborer in Elgin county. As a boy, young Ramsay had ambitions to be a lawyer. But as he grew older he began to perceive that the doors of advancement were closed to him through lack of "influence," as we should call it in this country, or "interest," as they say in England. He found himself forced into such jobs as that of factory hand, stable boy and messenger.

He had come under the influence of one of the old village "dominies" in the county of Elgin, however, and his mind had been set in the direction of intellectual ambitions. He must have acquired both the taste and the means for independent reading, for he had little schooling. But he did acquire from his early struggles and his disjointed desire to become a lawyer a strong sense of the injustice of society to the worker, and he has never changed his views on that subject.

He came to London in 1886 and became secretary to Mr. Thomas Lough, a post which he occupied till 1891. He began to take an interest in the Socialist movement early in life, and a natural gift for lucid and graceful expression won him a place as a foremost exponent of Socialist doctrines. He turned out much of the Socialist propaganda, and spoke in its interests. He was on the council of the Fabian Society, one of whose distinguished members is Mr. Bernard Shaw, and also sat on the council of the Labor party. From 1901 to 1904 he was a member of the London County Council.

He made two unsuccessful attempts to get into Parliament, contesting Southampton in 1895 and Leicester in 1900. He was finally elected in Leicester in 1906.

Ramsay Macdonald is largely responsible for the organization of the Labor movement in Great Britain. He has a genius for organization. His power of clear exposition helps, too, to win for him a foremost position as leader of the workers. He was the soul of the Labor party from 1911 to 1914. Formerly he had been chairman of the Independent Labor party (1906-9) and from 1900-1911 he was secretary of the party.

Ramsay Macdonald's attitude throughout the war made him one of the most disliked men in the Empire. The most conspicuous fact about him, the London Post once remarked, is that he is out of jail. He was the champion of the conscientious objectors. He could not see any jurisdiction for the war beyond the point where the democratic forces of the world were ready to take things into their hands. The war's main object, he contended, was not the destruction of the German Empire, but the destruction of the existing social system.

It was these views that made him such a strenuous protagonist of the "peace by negotiation" movement, and a termination of the war by concentrated action on the part of the Socialists of the world, including those of Germany.

Ramsay Macdonald, since he became a leading exponent of Socialism and a leader in the Labor party, has traveled widely and moved in the best social and intellectual circles. He has given an intellectual trend to the workingman's Socialism, lifting it out of the fiery impracticalities of the "soap box" school. Here is his own definition of Socialism, taken from a book which he wrote on the subject for an educational series: "Socialism is the creed of those who, recognizing that the community exists for the improvement of the individual and for the maintenance of liberty, and that the control of the economic circumstances of life means the control of life itself, seek to build up a social organization which will include in its activities the management of those economic instruments such as land and industrial capital that cannot be left safely in the hands of individuals."

In 1896 Macdonald married Miss Margaret Gladstone of the Woman's Industrial Council, a daughter of a distinguished man of science.

CLEVER MISS PANKHURST.

Some of the Things She Will Do For Women.

Miss Christabel Pankhurst is evidently a woman of perception, says the New York Sun. She realizes that most of the political curealls held out to the voter, and particularly the Socialistic panaceas, have lacked flavor. They have been abstract in their offerings, whereas most people want the concrete. Miss Pankhurst goes into particulars as to what the women of Great Britain will get when there is a woman's regime; not what they will get in the way of passing on the Abyssinian budget, but what they will get in their own homes:

"The British Parliament will be responsible for the electricity that turns the mangles, cooks the meals and warms the houses. Why should women drag coal scuttles about, stand over steaming washtubs, spend hours over old-fashioned ranges, which not only eat up coal but cook the cooks, when by legislation and electricity the burden of the world could be lifted?

What could make a better appeal to the women, not only of Britain but of every land where electric lights have been turned on? Women, we said, but the Utopian picture is fascinating to men as well. Every commuter, as well as his wife, knows that a world ruled by Queen Christabel would be a happy place; a joyous land of volts, watts, ohms, buttons, switches and indolent luxury. Buttons, buttons everywhere, and not a tap of work. One finger, pressing occasionally, would make a life worth the living.

The commuter wakes. It is daylight and he snaps off the electric light that has kept his hens laying in their distant house since 3 a.m. A push of a button closes his bedroom windows. Another button doubles the heat from the electric furnace. A tap of the finger and the cat is let in and the dog let out. Within easy reach of the bed a percolator of coffee begins to bubble. A button is pushed and his box of razor blades is gently warmed. Electricity, at the pressure of the commuter's thumb, heats his bath water.

Mrs. Commuter, sipping her preliminary coffee, reaches for a switch at her bedside—an electric switch—and her Pankhurstian kitchen begins to operate. The orange squeezer, the oatmeal pot, the automatic batter dropper, and its companion the electric griddle; the electric egg breaker and the electric plate warmer—all these take up their labors. In due time an electric elevator takes the tray to the dining-room or brings a tray upstairs. Meanwhile electricity has gently dragged Mr. Commuter out of bed and, through a magnetic device, has put the buttons in his clean shirt. A phonograph, connected with the thermometer and barometer, tells him the state of the weather. While he is putting on his collar, a feat which electricity will never perform for man, he pushes buttons which attend to the feeding of the chickens, the milking of the cow and the pumping of the tires.

To make the detail perfect we should have an electric voice calling to the man as he steps into his electric car: "Haven't you forgotten your commutation ticket?" But in that day of free electricity there will be no commutation tickets; railroads will be free, too. So, without a care, he will drive off, waving gaily to his wife, now on her way to press the buttons that attend to the dish-washing, the dusting and the sewing of the new crepe meteor party dress.

The Busy Censor.

When the peace news came Nov. 11th, a certain church-goer concluded to send a cable message to his nephew in England and used just the word "Doxology." Five hours later the telegraph operator called the sender and advised him that the censor wanted to know what code he used, as he could not find the word "Doxology" in his code.

Bristol Owns Own Docks.

The docks at Bristol are owned by the city and administered by a committee appointed by the City Council. They can accommodate the largest steamers and are well equipped, being provided with storage and warehouses of all kinds.

Was a Kingly Speech.

There are kings and kings. One sort has gone to the limbo in which they rightly belong, this sort including the treacherous Constantine, the even baser Ferdinand of Bulgaria, the weakling Charles of Austria, and the kinglets of the late German empire who aided and abetted the "All Highest" in his scheme to conquer Europe and the world. A few still remain who do honor to their positions because they have the right views of kingship and regard themselves as symbols of authority rather than as rulers by divine right, and who recognize that their rule is derived from the people. Among these are Albert of Belgium, who has returned to his capital amid remarkable manifestations of affection and loyalty, and George of England—or Windsor, as he has elected to call himself in order to divest the British throne of any of its previous German associations.

King George's reply to the leaders of his empire on the occasion of his reception of addresses passed by both Houses of Parliament was a model of what such a speech ought to be. There was no vain-glorious boasting about "my army" and "my navy" and "my people," though he gave to all three the tributes that are their due. It was a message of gratitude to all who had so valiantly fought to secure their own rights and liberties and those of the world. The King's tribute to the representatives of India and the overseas dominions was indeed well merited. Britain and its King have reason to be both proud of and grateful to the men of the far-flung empire who voluntarily gathered together from the four corners of the earth and fought with magnificent valor against the forces of evil and brutality so formidably arrayed against them. They furnished an object lesson for the whole world to ponder.

King George was right in emphasizing the fact that the British fleet has largely helped to win the war. His tribute to the memory of the late Lord Kitchener was also a just one. The initial work done by that great and lamented soldier in creating the wonderful British army which fought with such splendid valor at Mons, the Marne, in Flanders and in France, as well as in the Near and Far East, will never be forgotten.—New York Herald.

Athletes Lost In Great War.

Followers of sport may gain some idea of the enormous losses Great Britain and her colonies sustained in athletes during the war from the following brief account of the death of a man who ordinarily would have had obituary notices of a column or more. The note was taken from a daily sporting paper and was not longer for the simple reason that there were so many other deaths of prominent athletes announced not only that day, but every day, that the editors could do little more than give a perfunctory mention even to a world's champion. Here is the notice:—

"To the list of Rugby Internationals who have fallen in the war must be added Lieut. D. R. Sutherland of the Seaforth Highlanders, the famous Harwick and Scottish three-quarter. He had the fine record of being twelve times chosen to play for Scotland in her international encounters between 1910 and 1913. He was in the Scottish team against England in 1910-11-12-13, played against Wales in 1910-12-13 and against Ireland in 1913. Three times he figured in the ranks of the Thistles against France, and in 1912 played against the South Africans in their last tour."

Big Chief!

Chief Baptiste George, of the Inkameep Tribe of Indians, in the Similkameen district of British Columbia, who recently has been asking for an enlargement of his reserves, declaring them insufficient to maintain himself and his people, is not so poor that he did not manage to withdraw from his bank $31,000 in time to invest it patriotically in Victory Bonds.

Purchases Camp Buildings

S. Anglin & Co., Kingston, have purchased from the Canadian Government all the buildings at Camp Mohawk and Rathbun near Deseronto, and also some buildings at the summer camp at the later place. In all they have secured ninety-eight buildings, all of wood. Two of the large flight buildings, each 60 x 120 feet, have been sold to the Militia Department, which will remove them to the Royal Military College grounds and erect them as a skating rink. Anglin & Company have received requests from Toronto and other places for the buildings, many of which can be removed in whole and part, and used in solving the housing proposition which confronts so many places.

Napanee Musical and Literary Club.

The fourth meeting of the Napanee Musical and Literary Club on Tuesday evening was enjoyed by all who were privileged to be present. The programme, which consisted of Italian music, opened with Laurendeau's "Starlight Serenade," ably rendered by the "On-We-Glide" orchestra. Two piano solos for the left hand alone, "Com-e-gentil" and Lauba's "Sextet" played by Prof. Baird were especially praiseworthy. Miss Marion Wilson was heard to advantage in Bigelow's "Queen of the Earth." An illustrated travelogue on "Southern Italy" was given. Mrs. M. C. Bogart described the journey, making them very interesting by the personal touches which she added, having herself visited all the places shown. When the view of the Tiber River was thrown on the screen, Mrs. Stewart Daly ably and fittingly recited "Horatius at the Bridge." Other attractive features were Prelude No. 2 from Verdi's "Attila" sung by Misses Wheeler, Derry, Shorey, and Messrs. Boyce and Weiss, and the "Overture to Tancredi" by Rossini, played on two pianos by Misses Baughan, and Smith, Mrs. C. Boyce, and Prof. Baird. Mr. Everton Boyce, who is the possessor of a fine baritone voice, gave a very acceptable rendering of "Pinsuti's Bedouin Love Song." The On-We-Glide orchestra, in its usual brilliant style, gave the final number, and the enjoyable evening closed with "God Save the King."

As a literary writer, philosopher and christian gentleman, the author of "The Beloved Captain," "The Religion of the Soldier," "Some Who Were Lost and Were Found" and other classics of the great war, has few parallels. The lecturer brought that out splendidly by reading of well chosen passages from the author's writings.

Serbian Relief Fund.

The last report of the Serbian Relief Fund says: "The Serbian Relief Fund have just given a sum of £11,000 for the purpose of founding an orphanage for 500 Serbian children, endowing and staffing it for five years. This orphanage must be followed by other orphanages, as there are many thousands of destitute children in Serbia, and the future of the country depends in part on their survival and upbringing." The Canadian Serbian Relief Committee sends all the money they collect to the Serbian Relief Fund, London, England. The money collected by the Children's Branch goes to build an orphanage which is to be the gift of the children of the British Empire to the children of Serbia. The method followed is to provide children with collecting cards representing $5.00. Any child, group of children or school that collects $5.00 or more will receive a well designed certificate, signed by the Bishop of London, President of the Fund, and the name of the child or school will be placed on the Roll of Sympathy to be sent to King Peter of Serbia. It has been found that it is a great encouragement to children to receive some small acknowledgment.

The Society wish to convey their thanks to Mrs James Pringle for the valuable work she has done on hospital supplies. We also desire to thank the Red Cross workers at Tobolin for 5 pairs of socks. Donations from this society from time to time have been greatly appreciated.

Last week the Society forwarded to the Refugee Headquarters 22 bonnets, 26 petticoats, 12 jackets 11 pairs mittens, 5 boys' pyjamas, 1 pair trousers, and 1 girl's dress.

None has been received from headquarters that all work, finished or unfinished, must be brought in by March 8th, as after that date the Society cannot send any shipment free of charge.

In the meantime we would like as many of our workers as possible to come to our work room and take home with them the work to finish that is already cut out. It is very necessary that this work be finished before Mar 8th.

The Hall will be open each Saturday afternoon from two until four when the ladies in charge will be there to take in and give out work.

We are particular in filling your prescription as you are in selecting your doctor. We carry a large assortment of the world's standard drugs, and have three graduates in attendance.—WALLACE'S, Napanee's Leading Drug Store.

MORE MAPLE SUGAR

Chairman Thompson of the Canada Food Board is calling for the greatest possible production of maple sugar and maple syrup this coming spring. Farmers who have maple groves might well prepare to tap an unusual number of trees. In the opinion of those in the export business there will be a profitable market for maple syrup and maple sugar. Indication also points to a favorable season as the winter has been mild and there is plenty of moisture in the ground to insure a good run of sap.

Last year, although weather conditions were not favorable, owing to the prolonged and steady cold, and the lack of bright days until comparatively late in the season to start the sap running, the production of maple syrup and maple sugar showed a considerable increase over 1917. Customs department figures show that the export of maple sugar was augmented by 26 per cent, while the value of this export business showed an increase of 76 per cent owing to higher prices received for the product. The United States is a good customer for our maple products, while England and France, when trade conditions are adjusted, will also prove good customers, as Canadian soldiers have introduced maple sugar into those countries and a taste for it has been inaugurated.

When it is considered that our net debt has increased by over a billion dollars since the war, or 300 per cent, every dollar of export trade Canada can develop is needed. The readjustment of our finances and of our trade balances require the utmost utilization of our agricultural resources and the maple sugar and syrup crop, although comparatively small up to the present time may be greatly increased if farmers realize the opportunity and make the effort.

HOW ABOUT YOUR HANDS?

They Are Said to Indicate Your Character.

"He wrastled with my finger," said the rough miner of Bret Harte's immortal story, "The Luck of Roaring Camp," and, unable to withstand the appeal of helplessness or strength, the clinging baby fingers twined about the potent man's hand. Kentucky straightway adopted as his own the half-breed Indian baby that fate had thrown across his path.

Dr. Alfred McLane Hamilton, in his recent book, "The Recollections of an Alienist," speaks of the great significance of the human hands and, uses a photograph of the hands of Charles Dudley Warner, taken at the insistence of a friend. Beautiful article hands that express the grace and kindliness distinctive of that author.

M. d'Arpentigny, the French savant, states that the hands represent three types: "Those whose fingers have pointed tip are possessed of a rapid insight into things; are extra sensitive and pious and impulsive. To this class belong poets and artists. To the square tops belong scientific people; sensible, self-contained characters, professional men. The spade-shaped tops — thick tips with little pads of fish on each side of the nails—are materialistic, commercial people, who lack a higher appreciation of all that tends to bodily ease and comfort."

To many persons the hands are more expressive of emotion than the face. The welcoming hand stretched out in love, the appealing hand, the pleading hand, the withdrawn hand, the hand clasped in humility and submission.

All about us, on every hand, are those needing some assistance, perhaps trifling, perhaps great, over the rough places of life. Few of them can pay for this aid. It must be given freely, often given unasked. It may be they need your hand to safely cross the strip of ice upon the street. It may be they need the restraining hand of your prayers to guard them across the thin ice of temptation.

Unless you be one of those stricken of God, your hand, lying so quietly upon your knee, has power in it. It may be a brawny fist that can sling a trunk to the top of an express wagon. It may be a shadow hand whose only strength lies in writing a signature to a check that will be honored in a bank. It may be a hand of soothing magnetic touch, or fingers that can fashion a baby's dainty christening robe, but it is your hand to use, so use it, with all the strength that in you lies, to help your fellow men. If its strength can stop a runaway horse, if the signature may be worth a million, from a worthy doer, if the healing touch can ease pain, or the baptismal robe help to consecrate a life, you will have your fellow man's gratitude and God's blessing. If you keep the wolf from some door, but feebly barricaded against want, the gift will return to you in the smile of an angel guarding the gates of heaven. Do not wait until people are so hard-pressed that they relieve their piteous needs to you — their heart needs, their soul needs, their material poverty. Anticipate something of their want with your love, your remembrance, with the strength of your hand, and the encouragement of your words. And that when, like that woman of eager, helpful hands, God's peace upon you falls, tearful eyes may bless you as one whose ready hands brought solace to them in ways that you remember not.—Baltimore Sun.

England Ruled by "Foreigners."

A correspondent in the London New Witness recently pointed out that "England is suffering from foreign domination." He wrote: "We are governed by the Welsh, prayed at by the Scots, and preyed upon by the Irish." From a note in the London Evening Standard the genuine English Englishman does not seem to have much to say nowadays. It writes:

"The Versailles Conference is considering decisions which may affect the fate of Great Britain for generations.

"A correspondent points out that on this conference our country is represented by:

"One Welshman (Mr. Lloyd George).

"One Scottish Canadian (Mr. Bonar Law).

"One Jew (Lord Reading).

"Four Scotsmen (Mr. Balfour, Sir Eric Geddes, Marshal Haig, and Admiral Wemyss).

"One Englishman (Lord Milner).

"'Is this not,' he asks, 'a humiliating position for the country south of the Tweed—the so-called "predominant partner"? England proper, it is said to contribute seventy to eighty per cent. of the men in the British army, more than half the British navy, and about ninety per cent. of the British war expenditure. Yet she has only one Englishman to make her voice heard at this crisis in her history."

Oddly enough—though the Evening Standard omits to mention it—the one Englishman cited, Lord Milner, was actually born in Germany, and his father before him, since his grandfather, a physician, settled there, without losing touch with England or acquiring German citizenship. —Literry Digest.

TOOK CARE OF TURKS.

Important Task Was Given to Gen. G. N. Cory.

The allied officer who arranged the carrying out of the terms of armistice with Turkey was a Toronto man, Gen. G. N. Cory, D.S.O., son of Mr. Chester D. Cory. Not long ago Gen. Cory was appointed chief of staff of the British army in the Balkans and as such he was the envoy sent to Constantinople to arrange the carrying out of the terms of the armistice with the Turkish Government. He went to the capital of the Turkish empire on a destroyer and was received by an imposing guard of honor and conducted in a Turkish automobile to the leading hotel of the city.

There he was waited upon by the Grand Visier, Izzat Pasha, as head of the Turkish Government, and Gen. Liman von Sanders, the German commander-in-chief of the Turkish armies. Subsequent to arriving at a final settlement Gen. Cory took possession of the battleship Goeben.

Gen. Cory was at one time on the headquarters staff of the Third Division. He has been in the British army since he was twenty. He is a graduate of Bishops College School, Lennoxville, and of the Royal Military College, Kingston. On his graduation he was gazetted to the Second Battalion, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, then station at Oriella, India. When the South African Boer war was threatened his regiment was ordered to South Africa in 1897, and he was in the first engagement at Dundee. After the retreat of Ladysmith the regiment was refitted and left that place on the last train out, as did Gen. French, now Field Marshal French.

Subsequently the then Lieut. Cory was appointed adjutant of a mounted infantry regiment under command of the present Gen. Gough, and served throughout the war. He was mentioned in despatches twice and received the D.S.O. for "skill in handling his troops." He has the Queen's Medal with seven clasps and the King's Medal with two clasps.

Gen. Cory comes of good fighting stock. His father served with the 13th Hamilton Regiment at Ridgeway. His grandfather was a surgeon with the Prince Edward County Regiment in the rebellion of 1837, while in the war of 1812 his grandfather, upholding U. E. Loyalist principles, served with a battalion from the same county.

When the war broke out Gen. Cory was a major. He has since been decorated with the Mons medal, the Russian Order of St. Anne, the Greek Order and made a Commander of the Bath by His Majesty King George, the latter honor having been personally conferred upon him only a few months ago at Buckingham Palace. Gen. Cory was several times mentioned in despatches and promoted to his present rank about a year ago. He is now in London, England, and expects shortly to visit Canada.

The Remedy.

Discussing the influenza epidemic and the many so-called influenza cures, a well-known authority says: "Isolation, warmth and perfect care are the only treatment. The so-called cures remind me of a story about a grocer. To this grocer a patron brought back a pound of butter.

"'I want to complain about this butter. It's awful,' the patron said.

"The grocer sniffed it. 'Smells sweet enough to me,' he observed.

"'But it's full of hair,' said the patron. 'I counted eight or nine hairs in it. Yes, sir, this butter's full of hair, and I want to know what you're going to do about it.'

"Why, make it right, of course,' said the grocer genially, and he reached up and took a tiny packet from a shelf. 'Here. Here's a packet of hairpins. You can pin it back with 'em as you go along.'"

WOULD GO FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE.

Mrs Harrington Feels Like going Out and Telling Everybody About Tanlac.

"I would just like to go from house to house and tell the people about Tanlac," said Mrs Mollie Harrington of 114 3rd street, Peoria, in a recent statement which she requested published for the benefit of others.

"My health gave way years ago," Mrs Harrington continued, "and I had long since despaired of ever getting any better. I was very weak and pale, hardly had the color of blood in my face—suffered terribly from stomach trouble, and was extremely nervous. I was really in a run-down condition and being past fifty eight years of age, which I thought was against me, I had no hope of getting well and nothing to look forward to but the end, which I often felt was drawing near.

"Then I got to reading about the wonderful results others were getting from Tanlac and yet, I could not make up my mind at first to try it, as I had little idea that it could help a person of my age, especially one in such a low state of health. But somehow I was influenced to buy a bottle and that was about the luckiest day of my life, for when I finished taking it there was a wonderful improvement in my condition.

"Then I had something to look forward to—hope of complete recovery—so I bought a few more bottles of Tanlac and now I don't have to tell my friends I am well again for they can see that from my looks and often speak of it. I am more thankful to Tanlac than I can express, for now I am enjoying life and good health, which I never expected to enjoy any more, and I want this testimonial published in all the papers in Illinois that everybody may know what Tanlac will do for I feel that I ought to tell all suffering people about this wonderful medicine."

Tanlac is sold in Napane at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

ON WITH THE DANCE!

Rule In British Army Has Been Rescinded.

On with the dance is again the order of the day with the British army. For over three years officers have been forbidden to dance in any public places or clubs, and although ways—and extremely profitable ways at that—have been found to evade this order by Lt.-Gen. Sir Francis Lloyd, who commands the London area, the announcement that it has been rescinded has caused general satisfaction.

What probably has influenced the British authorities more than anything else is the invidious position it has placed British officers in comparison with American officers. When there were only a few Americans over in London it did not matter, but for some weeks past American officers have been dancing every evening at Murray's—the popular London night club, controlled by Jack May, the Anglo-American host of many similar clubs—and the British officer has naturally felt it hard luck that he should not be allowed to do what his American, French, Belgian and Italian comrades were permitted to do.

It had even been suggested to the Americans that they should refrain from dancing, but this did not meet with approval. Also the American authorities strongly supported the efforts which had been made to rescind the order affecting British officers.

Now naval, army and air service officers have been permitted to dance at Murray's Club. Sir Francis Lloyd having informed Jack May that he proposed to rescind this disciplinary regulation which prohibited officers going to "any dancing or other night club in uniform."

For some time past it had been evident that this order would be rescinded. In the first place conditions are entirely different from those existing when the order came into force.

Then complaints were received from commanding officers that many officers under training were dancing all night, with the consequence that these young men were not fit to put in a full day's drill and their training suffered.

In those days also clubs could keep open all night, but to-day all public dancing halls must be closed down at 10 o'clock.

EXTRA WARM EVENING WRAPS

Favored Garment Folds Around Figure and Has Double Thickness Over Chest.

Certain economists buy a semiformal frock that will serve for gay hours between four and twelve p. m. with its own coat, which relieves them from the purchase of an extra evening coat, or keeps the one they possess for use for special occasions. This is after all, an extravagant trick, the critics say, for one warm long coat should serve.

The wrap of the hour is warm and heavy. It is no longer of chiffon nor does it show itself in cape form. It folds around the figure and has a double thickness over the chest. Furs are heaped on it, and, often, there is a return to the fashions of Charles II in the loose undersleeve of fur that comes out from the wide upper sleeve. This idea, by the way, is carried out in a few street clothes, and it catches the fancy of those who abominate the hintus between the edge of a flaring sleeve and the hand.

And such sleeves are warm. They set like a padded muff.

HENS ARE NOW LAYING

By Lighting Until 9 p.m. Egg Production Nearly Doubled.

Cause, Symptoms and Cure of Ringworm [illegible] Must Be Done Very Contagious—Stockman Must Take Great Precautions to Prevent Its Spread.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Most of everybody who is keeping poultry wants to get eggs in winter. Generally speaking, the number of eggs gradually goes down from week to week from September to January and then there is a slow but gradual increase until March, April and May, which is in Ontario are the best months for egg production.

It is unusual, and in most cases very unwise, to publish figures in regard to experiments until the material has been very thoroughly tested, but in this particular case, considering the high cost of feeds and the general scarcity of new laid eggs, we are giving the figures on a rather short test of but four weeks' duration. The results appear to be generally true in all pens tested and are in accord with results obtained elsewhere.

The increase in egg yield has been obtained by the use of electric lights, or prolonging the day. The facts of the matter appear to be that a hen's crop is too small a reservoir to hold sufficient feed for the long night. A hen, to lay, must have a surplus of feed over and above that required for body maintenance.

In these particular trials, the results of which are given below, the lights were turned on at dusk and they turned off at nine o'clock at night. The birds get their first feed in the morning at seven o'clock and a few dull mornings require lights for about one hour.

The usual feed of grain given at about four to five o'clock in the afternoon is missed or only a handful or two of grain is given to twenty-five birds, simply to keep them moving a little. The full feed is given at about eight o'clock.

The following results have been secured:—

Eggs laid week beginning October	6th.	13th.	20th.	27th.	Tot.
No. of birds.	60	60	60	60
April hatched pullets (no lights used)	53	150	211	250	664
April hatched pullets (lights used)	14	74	120	174	382
25 yearling hens (no lights used)	76	96	89	108	369
25 yearling hens (lights used)	62	70	60	61	253
100 April hatched pullets, all in one pen (lights used)	416	401	404	444	1,665

There are many people keeping poultry who have no electric lights. Fair to good results have been secured elsewhere by using ordinary barn lanterns. The danger of fire when using lanterns is materially increased. We have not tested these as yet but hope to have them under way soon. For electric lighting we use three ordinary bulbs for a pen of one hundred birds, or one light in a twenty-five bird pen.—Prof. R. W. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

Ringworm.

Ringworm is a contagious disease to which all classes of animals, and man, are subject.

Calves and young cattle appear to be more susceptible to the trouble than other animals, but no age renders an animal immune. It is purely a skin disease, and is due to the presence of a vegetable parasite, which is readily capable of being conveyed from one animal to another by direct contact, the hands of the attendant, pails, stable utensils, clothing, harness, saddles, blankets, the contact of one animal with the stalls, etc., of affected animals, etc. In like manner, curry-combs, brushes, rubbing cloths, etc., that are used on affected animals of any class, if used on other animals, become a fertile cause of infection.

Symptoms.—While any part of the animal may be the seat of the disease, the skin around the eyes and ears, face, and on the neck and back, appears to be the favorite seat.

The first symptom shown is usually an itchiness, which is followed by a slight form of eruption, which soon assumes the appearance of little yellowish scales of a circular form, the mass scales forming a circular appearance hence the term "ringworm." A variable number of these circular patches may be noticed on different parts of the body.

Treatment.—It is necessary that great care be taken to avoid the conveyance of the virus from the diseased to healthy animals. Where practicable, it is well to remove all non-infected animals to non-infected premises. The infected premises should be disinfected by thoroughly sweeping and dusting, and then giving a thorough coat of an insecticide, as a hot 10 per cent of one of the coal tar antiseptics or carbolic acid, or a coat of hot lime wash with 5 per cent carbolic acid.

Local treatment consists in moistening the scales with warm water and soap, or sweet oil, removing them in order to expose the unprotected surfaces of the affected areas. An essential is a tincture of iodine should be applied once or twice daily until cured.—J. H. R., Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

THE KEEPING OF MILK RECORDS.

The keeping of milk records has become a prime factor in the success of every farm dairy. In this connection many farmers are taking advantage of the cow testing work carried on by the dairy branch of the Department at Ottawa. Special effort has been made to devise a plan for carrying on this work which will interest the makers and managers of cheese factories, creameries, milk condensing and milk powder plants. Full instructions for carrying on the work are given in a circular just issued by the Dairy and cold storage commissioner at Ottawa. In this circular not only are full instructions given relative to testing, along with notes for herd owners but samples are also supplied of the method that should be followed, and blank application forms, first, for assistance in herd record work, and secondly, for employment as a milk tester. The circular can be had free on adressing the publications branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

THE CASE OF MR REUBEN BROWN

W. S. Exley vs. Reuben Brown Breach of the O. T. A.

Offence Dec. 28th, 1918, hearing Jan. 8th, 1919.

The accused being present the information is read over to him and he is asked if he is ready for trial.

Walter S. Exley, sworn, said: I am license Inspector for the County of Lennox & Addington and I know the defendant Reuben Brown. I saw the defendant since the 28th of December, 1918 it was at Mr Windover's store on the 6th of January 1918 and saw him there and had a conversation with him. He and I were alone. I asked him then if he remembered having a drink of liquor in the Campbell House hotel on Saturday evening the 28th of December last out of a bottle. He told me he had, that he found the bottle there and he took a drink from it. He did not tell me what he did with the bottle. I asked him if Perry, the blacksmith from Deseronto was not in the car, he stated no but he thought Perry was with the car. I asked him who were in the car and who the liquor belonged to, he told me he did not know. I asked him if the name of the person that drank with him out of the bottle at the car, he said I am not going to tell you too much and get myself into trouble he said he found the bottle and took a drink out of it and you can't do anything to me for that.

The defendant is asked if he wishes to ask this witness any question, he states he does not.

Selvin Black, sworn, said: I live in Napanee, I know the defendant. I saw him on Jan. 6th at Mr Windover's store in Napanee. Mr McFarlane and another person was present, the other man I did not know, the accused stated that he had a drink out of a bottle and put it back in a cutter. Mr Exley had been with the accused in another part of the building and it was after Mr Exley had gone out that the accused made the statement I have already sworn to.

Reuben Brown, sworn, said—I am the defendant, I saw Mr Exley and the last witness in Mr Windover's store on the 6th of Jany. 1919, I said what they stated I did say on that occasion and I was talking about what occurred on the 28th December before that in the Campbell House yard. I was in the Campbell House yard on the 28th December, I came there with my own rig, I saw Perry, the blacksmith of Deseronto in the Campbell House. He could walk all right and talk alright, there were others with him, I don't know whether Perry came in an auto or in a cutter, I know Perry pretty well, he does my work part of the time, he lives three miles from my place. When I was talking with Mr Exley I may have told Exley he, Perry, was drunk. I would not say that now under oath. At the time I was talking with Mr Exley I did not think it would amount to any thing when I talked about the liquor drinking from the bottle. I told him I smelled the whiskey and went nosing around for it On the 28th Sept. I got home about 11 o'clock or a little after I do not remember telling my wife that Mr Perry was drunk in Napanee that day, on the 6th day of January I told my wife that Wm. Perry looked to me as if he was drunk and he was mud up to his knees, I do not know that I was lying on that occasion, there was some soldiers and other fellows with him in the Campbell House when I saw him. I did not see Perry go out in the yard where the liquor has been said to have been on the 28th of December, I deny having taken a drink of liquor in any place except in my own home since the Act came in force and I did not drink any in the Campbell House yard or in Napanee on the day in question.

"I don't grant interviews," O'Neil said sharply. He could not guess by what evil chance the news of his plans had leaked out.

"Nothing doing!" Sheldon spoke into the transmitter. He turned again to his employer. "Operator says the party doesn't mind waiting."

O'Neil frowned impatiently.

"Throw him out!" Sheldon directed brusquely, then suddenly dropped the receiver as if had burnt his fingers. "Say! It's a woman, Murray! She's on the wire. She thanks you sweetly and says she'll wait."

"A woman! A newspaper woman!" O'Neil rose and seized the instrument roughly. His voice was freezing as he said: "Hello! I refuse to be interviewed. Yes! There's no use!— His tone suddenly altered. "Miss Appleton! I beg your pardon. I'll be right down." Turning to his subordinates, he announced with a wry smile: "This seems to terminate our interview. She's Dan Appleton's sister, and therefore"— He shrugged resignedly. "Now run along. I'll see you in the morning."

His "boys" made their way down to the street, talking guardedly as they went.

O'Neil entered the ladies' parlor with a feeling of extreme annoyance, expecting to meet an inquisitive, bold young woman bent upon exploiting his plans and his personality in the usual inane journalistic fashion. He was surprised and offended that Dan Appleton, in whom he had reposed the utmost faith, should have betrayed his secret. Publicity was a thing he detested at all times, and at present he particularly dreaded its effect. But he was agreeably surprised in the girl who came toward him briskly with hand outstretched.

Miss Appleton was her brother's double. She had his frank blue eyes, his straw gold hair, his humorous smile and wide awake look. She was not by any means beautiful—her features were too irregular, her nose too tip tilted, her mouth too generous for that —but she seemed crisp, clean cut and wholesome. What first struck O'Neil was her effect of boyishness. From the crown of her plain straw "sailor" to the soles of her sensible walking boots there was no suggestion of feminine frippery. She wore a plain shirt waist and a tailored skirt, and her hair was arranged simply. The wave in its pale gold was the only concession to mere prettiness. There was no impression of deliberate masculinity. She struck one as merely not interested in clothes, instinctively expressing in her dress her own boyish directness and her businesslike absorption in her work.

"You're furious, of course. Anybody would be," she began, then laughed so frankly that his eyes softened and the wrinkles at their corners deepened.

"I fear I was rude before I learned you were Dan's sister," he apologized. "But you see I'm a bit afraid of newspaper people."

"I knew you'd struggle, although Dan described you as a perfectly angelic person."

"Indeed!"

"But I'm a real reporter, so I won't detain you long. I don't care where you were born or where you went to school or what patent breakfast food you eat. Tell me, are you going to build another railroad?"

"I hope so. I'm always building roads when my bids are low enough to secure the contracts. That's my business."

"Are you going to build one in Alaska?"

"Possibly. There seems to be an opportunity there, but Dan has probably told you as much about that as I am at liberty to tell. He's been over the ground."

She pursed her lips at him. "You know very well, or you ought to know, that Dan wouldn't tell me a thing while he's working for you. He hasn't said a word, but— Is that why you came in frowning like a thundercloud? Did you think he set me on your trail?"

"I think I do know that he wouldn't do anything really indiscreet." Murray regarded her with growing favor. There was something about this boyish girl which awakened the same spontaneous liking he had felt upon his first meeting with her brother. He surprised her by confessing boldly:

"I am building a railroad—to the interior of Alaska. I've been over and raised the money. My men are here. We'll begin operations at once."

"That's what Mr. Gordon told me about his scheme, but he hasn't done much so far."

"My line will put his out of business; also that of the trust and the various without preference lines."

"Where does your road start from?"

"The town of Omar, on King Phillip sound, near Hope and Cortez. It will run up the Salmon river and past the glaciers which those other men refused to tackle."

"If I weep it is for joy," said the girl. "I don't like Curtis Gordon. I call him Simon Legree."

"Why?"

"Well, he impresses me as a real old time villain with the riding boots and the whip and all that. 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' is my favorite play; it's so funny. This is a big story you're given me, Mr. O'Neil."

"I realize that."

"It has the biggest news value of anything Alaskan which has 'broken' for some time. I think you are a very nice person to interview, after all."

"Wait! I don't want you to use a word of what I've told you."

Miss Appleton's clearly penciled brows rose inquiringly. "Then why didn't you keep still?"

"You asked me. I told you because you are Dan Appleton's sister. Nevertheless I don't want it made public."

"Let's sit down," said the girl, with a laugh. "To tell you the truth, I didn't come here to interview you for my paper. I'm afraid I've tried your patience awfully." A faint flush tinged her clear complexion. "I just came really, to get some news of Dan."

"He's perfectly well and happy, and you'll see him in a few days."

Miss Appleton nodded. "So he wrote, but I couldn't wait. Now, won't you tell me all about him—not anything about his looks and his health, but little unimportant things that will mean something? You see, I'm his mother and his sister and his sweetheart."

O'Neil did as he was directed and before long found himself reciting the details of that trying trip up the Salmon river. He told her how he had sent the young engineer out to run the preliminary survey for the new railroad and added: "He is in a fair way to realize his ambition of having you with him all the time. I'm sure that will please you."

"And it is my ambition to make enough money to have him with me," she announced. With an air of some importance she continued: "I'll tell you a secret. I'm writing for the magazines—stories!" She sat back awaiting his enthusiasm. When she saw that it was not forthcoming she exclaimed, "My, how you do rave over the idea!"

"I congratulate you, of course, but"—

"Now, don't tell me that you tried it once. Of course you did. I know it's a harmless disease, like the measles, and that everybody has it when they're young. Above all, don't volunteer the information that your own life is full of romance and would make a splendid novel. They all say that."

Murray O'Neil felt the glow of personal interest that results from the discovery in another of a congenial sense of humor.

"I didn't suppose you had to write," he said. "Dan told me you had invested your fortune and were on Easy street."

That was poetic license. I confess I did slightly in my report to him because I knew he was doing so well."

"Then your investment didn't turn out fortunately?"

Miss Appleton hesitated. "You seem to be a kindly, trusting person. I'm tempted to destroy your faith in human nature."

"Please don't."

"Yes, I shall. My experience may help you to avoid the pitfalls of high finance. Well, then, it was a very sad little fortune, to begin with, like a boy in grammar school—not big enough to be of no assistance. But even a boy's size fortune looked big to me. I wanted to invest it in something sure—no national bank stock, subject to the danger of an absconding cashier, and not in government bonds with the possibility of war to depreciate them, but something stable and agricultural, with the inexhaustible resources of nature back of it. This isn't my own language. I cribbed it from the apple man."

"Apple man?"

"Yes. He had brown eyes and a silky mustache and a big irrigation plan over east of the mountains. You gave him your money and he gave you a perfectly good receipt. Then he planted little apple trees. He nursed them tenderly for five years, after which he turned them over to you with his blessing and you lived happily for evermore. At least that was the idea. You could not fail to grow rich, for the water always bubbled through his little ditch, and it never froze nor rained to spoil things. I used to love apples. And then there was my name, which seemed a good omen. But lately I've considered changing 'Appleton' to 'Berry' or 'Plummer' or some, other kind of fruit."

"I infer that the scheme failed." O'Neil's eyes were half closed with amusement.

"Yes. It was a good scheme, too, except for the fact that the irrigation ditch ran uphill and that there wasn't any water where it started from and that apples never had been made to grow in that locality because of something in the soil and that brown eyed Betty's title to the land never didn't hold water any more than the ditch. Otherwise I'm sure he'd have made a success and I'd have spent my declining years in a rocking chair under the falling apple blossoms, eating pippins and Jonathans and Northern Spies. I can't bear to touch them now. Life at my boarding house is one long battle against apple pies, apple puddings, apple tapioca. Ugh! I hate the very word."

"I can understand your aversion," laughed O'Neil. "I wonder if you would let me order dinner for both of us, provided I taboo fruit. Perhaps I'll think of something more to tell you about Dan. I'm sure he wouldn't object"—

"Oh, my card is all the chaperon I need! It takes me everywhere and renders me superior to the smaller conventionalities." She handed him one, and he read, "Eliza Y. Appleton—The Review."

"May I ask what the 'Y' stands for?"

He held up the card between his thumb and finger.

Miss Appleton blushed for all the world like a boy, then answered stiffly: "It stands for Violet. But that isn't my fault, and I'm doing my best to live it down."

On her return to the Review office the managing editor complimented Miss Appleton on her work and surprised her by assigning her to Alaska to expose the men who were "trying to snatch control of the empire."

CHAPTER VIII.

The Town of Omar.

THE town of Omar lay drenched in mist as the steamer bearing the representative of the Review drew in at the dock. The whole region was sodden and rain-soaked, verdant with a lush growth. No summer sun shone here to bake sprouting leaves or sear tender grasses. Beneath the sheltering firs a blanket of moss extending over hill and vale, knee deep and treacherous to the foot.

Omar itself was a mushroom city, sprung up by magic, as if the dampness at its roots had caused it to rise overnight. A sawmill shrieked complainingly; a noisy switch engine shunted rows of flat cars back and forth, tooting lustily, the rattle of steam winches and the cries of stevedores from a discharging freighter echoed against the hillsides.

Dan Appleton, his clothing dewy from the fog, his cheeks bronzed by exposure, was over the rail before the ship had made fast and had Eliza in his arms, crushing her with the hug of a bear.

"Come up to the house, sis, quick," he cried when the first frenzy of greeting was over—"your house and mine!" His eyes were dancing; his face was alight with eagerness.

"But, Danny," she laughed, squeezing his arm tenderly, "you live with Mr. O'Neil and all those other men in a horrible, crawling bunkhouse."

"Oh, do I? I'll have you know that our bunkhouses don't crawl. And, besides— But wait! It's a s'prise!"

"A s'prise?" she queried eagerly. "For me?"

He nodded.

"Tell me what it is, quick! You know I never could wait for s'prises."

"Well, it's a brand new ultra stylish residence for just you and me. When the chief found you were coming he had a cottage built."

"Danny! It was only five days ago that I cabled you!"

"That's really ten days for us, for, you see, we never sleep. It is finished and waiting, and your room is in white and the paint will be dry tomorrow. He's a wonder!"

Remembering the nature of her mission, Eliza demurred. "I'm afraid I can't live there, Dan. You know"— she hesitated—"I may have to write some rather dreadful things about him."

"What?" Dan's face fell. "You are going to attack the chief! I had no idea of that!" He looked genuinely distressed and a little stern.

She laid a pleading hand upon his arm. "Forgive me, Dan," she said. "I knew how you would feel, and, to tell the truth, I don't like that part of it one bit. But it was my big chance—the sort of thing I have been waiting years for. I couldn't bear to miss it." There was a suspicion of tears in her eyes. "I didn't think it all out. I just came. Things get awfully mixed, don't they? Of course I wouldn't attack him unfairly, but I do believe in conservation—and what could I do but come here to you?"

Dan smiled to reassure her. "Perhaps you won't feel like excoriating him when you learn more about things. I know you wouldn't be unfair. You'd flunk the job first. Wait till you talk to him. But you can't refuse his kindness, for a time at least. There's nowhere else for you to stay, and Murray would pick you up and put you into the cottage, muckrake and all, if I didn't. He has to go out on the work this morning or he'd have been here to welcome you. He sent apologies and said a lot of nice things which I've forgotten."

"What?" Dan's face fell. "You are going to attack the chief."

"Well"—Eliza still looked troubled—"all right. But wait!" she cried, with a swift change of mood. "I've made a little friend, the dearest, the most lonesome creature! We shared the same stateroom, and we're sisters. She eventually says I'm pretty, so of course I'm her slave for life." She hurried away in the midst of Dan's loyal protestations that she was pretty—more beautiful than the stars, more pleasing to the eye than the orchids of Brazil. A moment later she reappeared to present Natalie Gerard.

Dan greeted the new arrival with a cordiality in which there was a trace of shyness unusual with him. "We've made quite a change since you were up here, Miss Gerard," he remarked. "The ships stop first at Omar now, you see. I trust it won't inconvenience you."

A CRIPPLE FOR THREE YEARS

Helpless in Bed With Rheumatism Until He Took "FRUIT-A-TIVES".

MR. ALEXANDER MUNRO

R.R. No. 1, Lorne, Ont.

"For over three years, I was confined to bed with Rheumatism. During that time, I had treatment from a number of doctors, and tried nearly everything I saw advertised to cure Rheumatism, without receiving any benefit.

Finally, I decided to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. Before I had used half a box, I noticed an improvement; the pain was not so severe, and the swelling started to go down.

I continued taking this fruit medicine, improving all the time, and now I can walk about two miles and do light chores about the place".

"Not in the least," said Natalie. "I shall arrive at Hope quite soon enough."

Dan led the two girls ashore and up through the town to a moss green bungalow, its newness attested by the yellow sawdust and fresh shavings which lay about. Amid their exclamations of delight he threw open the door to the furnished interior and, among other wonders, a bedroom daintily done in white, with white curtains at the mullioned windows and a suit of wicker furniture.

"Where he dug all that up I don't know," Dan said, pointing to the bed and dresser and chairs. "He must have had it hidden out somewhere."

Eliza surveyed this chamber with wondering eyes. "It makes me feel quite ashamed," she said, "though, of course, he did it for Dan. When he discovers my abominable mission he'll probably set me down as the vain and break all my illusions. But isn't he magnificent?"

"He quite overwhelms one," Natalie agreed. "Back in New York he's been sending me American Beauties every week for more than a year. It's his princely way." She colored slightly despite the easy frankness of her manner.

"You are still working miracles," Natalie told O'Neil an hour later, while he was showing his visitors the few sights of Omar, "miracles of kindness, mural."

Dan and his sister were following at a distance, arm in arm and chattering like magpies.

"No, no! That cottage is nothing. Miss Appleton had to have some place to stop."

"This all seems like magic," Natalie paused and looked over the busy little town. "And to think you have done it in a year."

"It was not I who did it; the credit belongs to those 'boys' of whom I told you. They are all here, by the way—Parker, McKay, Mellen, Sheldon, Dan Gray—he has the hospital, you know."

"And Mr. Slater?"

"Oh, we couldn't exist without Happy Tom! No, the only miracle about all this is the quickness with which it was possible. It is that which has broken all records in railroad building; that's what has pushed our tracks forward until we're nearly up to one of nature's real miracles. You shall see those glaciers one of these days. Sometimes I wonder if even the devotion of those men will carry us through the final test. But—you shall meet them all tonight—my whole family."

"I can't. The ship leaves this afternoon."

"I've arranged to send you to Hope in my motorboat just as Mr. Gordon sent me on my way a year ago. You will stay with the Appletons tonight and help at the house warming, then Dan will take you on in the morning. Women are such rare guests at Omar that we refuse to part with them. You agree?"

"How can I refuse? Your word seems to be law here. I'll send word to mother by the ship that I am detained by royal decree."

She spoke with a gayety that seemed a little forced, and at mention of her departure a subtle change had come over her face. O'Neil realized that she had mastered mercilessly since his last meeting with her; there was no longer quite the same effect of naive girlishness.

"This was a very unhappy year for your loyal subject, Mr. O'Neil."

"I'm sorry," he declared with such genuine kindliness that she was moved to confide in him.

"Mother and I are ruined."

"Will you tell me about it?"

"It's merely—those wretched coal claims. I have a friend in the land office at Washington and, remembering what you said, I asked him to look them up. I knew no other way to go about it. He tells me that something was done, or was not done, by us, and that we have lost all we put in."

"I urged Gordon to obey that ruling last spring." Natalie saw that his face was dark with indignation, and the knowledge that he really cared set her heart to pounding gratefully. She was half tempted to tell about that other, that greater trouble which had stolen in upon her peace of mind and robbed her of her girlhood, but she shrank from baring her wounds—above all, a wound so vital and so personal as this.

"Does your mother know?" he queried.

"No, I preferred to tell her in Mr. Gordon's presence." Murray noticed that she no longer called the man uncle. "But now that the time has come I'm frightened."

"Never allow yourself to be afraid. Fear is something false; it doesn't exist."

"It seems to me he was—unfaithful to his trust. Am I right?"

"That is something you must judge for yourself," he told her gravely. "You see, I don't know anything about the reasons which prompted him to sacrifice your rights. He may have had very good reasons. I dare say he had. In building this railroad I have felt but one regret—that is the indirect effect it may have upon you and your mother. Your affairs are linked closely with Gordon's, and the success of my enterprise will mean the failure of his."

"You mustn't feel that way. I'm sure it won't affect us at all, for we have nothing more to lose. Sometimes I think his judgment is faulty, erratic, wonderful man though he is. Mother trusts him blindly, of course, and so did I, yet I'm hardly know what to do. It is impossible that he did worse than make a mistake."

Her dark eyes were bent upon Murray, and they were eloquent with the question which she could not bring herself to ask. He longed to tell her frankly that Curtis Gordon was a charlatan, or even worse, and that his fairest schemes were doomed to failure by the very nature of his methods, but instead he said:

"I'm deeply distressed. I hope things are not as bad as you think and that Mr. Gordon will be able to straighten them out for you. If ever I can be of service you must be sure to call upon me."

Her thanks were conventional, but in her heart was a deep, warm gratitude, for she knew that he meant what he said and would not fail her.

Dan Appleton, eying Natalie and his chief from a distance, exclaimed admiringly:

"She's a perfect peach, sis! She registered a home run with me the first time at bat!"

"Be it like," Eliza.

"You know a fellow gets mighty lonely in a place like this. She'd make a dandy sister-in-law for you, wouldn't she?"

"Forget it!" said Eliza sharply. "That's rank insubordination. Omar Khayyam snatched her from the briny and tried to die for her. He has already set aside a room for expensive roses and he remembers the date of her birthday. Just you keep your hands off."

"How does she feel about him?"

"Oh, she worships him, of course. I don't know just how deep the feeling goes, but I got the impression that it was pretty serious. You women can't borrow hairpins and mix powder puffs for a week and remain strangers."

"Then, as for Daniel Appleton, C. E., good night!" exclaimed her brother ruefully. "If I were a woman I'd marry him myself, provided I could get around the law that limits the number of the species. I suppose I shall creep out into the jungle and sulk."

"Right-o! Don't enter this race, for I'm afraid you'd be a bad loser. Perhaps I can't say anything to him to rave about. What scares me pink is the knowledge that I must tell him the wretched business that brings me here. If he strikes me, Danny, remember I still your sister."

When the big gong gave the signal for luncheon Appleton conducted Natalie and Eliza to the company messroom, where the field and office force of the railroad, and presently those of his fellow lieutenants. At supper time those who had been out on the line during the day were likewise introduced, and after a merry meal the whole party escorted the two girls back to the new bungalow.

"Why, here's a piano!" Eliza exclaimed upon entering the parlor.

"I borrowed it for the evening from the Elite saloon," O'Neil volunteered. "It's a dissipated old instrument, and some of its teeth have been knocked out—in drunken brawls, I'm afraid—but the owner vouched for its behavior on this occasion."

At her first opportunity Eliza undertook to make that confession the thought of which had troubled her all the afternoon. Drawing O'Neil aside, she began with some trepidation, "Have you any idea why I'm here?"

"I supposed either you or Dan had achieved your pet ambition."

"Far from it. I have a fell purpose, and when you learn what it is I expect you to move the ship out—that's what always happens in the play when the heroine is dispossessed. Well, then, I've been sent by the Review to bare all the disgraceful secrets of your life!"

"I'm delighted to learn you'll be here so long. You can't possibly finish that task before next spring." His manner, though quizzical, was genuinely hearty.

"Don't laugh!" said the girl. "There's nothing funny about it. I came north as a spy."

"Then you're a Northern Spy!"

"Apples!" she cried. "You remembered, didn't you? I never supposed men like you could be flippant. Well, here goes for the worst." She outlined her conversation with the editor of her paper.

"So you think I'm trying to steal Alaska," he said when she had concluded.

"That seems to be the general idea."

"It's a pretty big job."

"Whoever controls transportation will have the country by the throat."

"Yet somebody must build railroads, since the government won't. Did it ever occur to you that there is a great risk involved in a thing of this sort and that capital must see a profit before it enters a new field? I wonder if you know how badly this country needs an outlet and how much greater the benefit in dollars and cents will be to the men in the interior than to those who finance the road. But I perceive that you are a conservationist."

"Rabid!" Eliza bridled a little at the hint of amused superiority in his voice. "I'm a suffragist too! I dare say that adds to your disgust."

"Nonsense!" he protested. "I have no quarrel with conservation nor with votes for women.' Neither have I anything to conceal. I'm only afraid that, like most writers, you will be content with half information. Incomplete facts are responsible for most misunderstandings. If you are in earnest and will promise to take the time necessary to get at all the facts I'll make an agreement with you."

"I promise! Time and a typewriter are my only assets. I don't intend to be hurried."

Dan approached, drawn by the uncomfortable knowledge of his sister's predicament, and broke in:

"Oh, sis has time to burn! She's going to write a book on the salmon canneries while she's here. It's bound to be one of the 'six best smellers'!"

O'Neil waved him away with the threat of sending him out among the mosquitoes.

"I'll agree to show you everything we're doing."

"Even to the coal fields?"

"Even to them. You shall know everything; then you can write what you please."

"And when I've exposed you to the world as a commercial pickpocket, as a looter of the public domain—after congress has appropriated your fabulous coal claims—will you nail up the door of this little cottage and fire Dan?"

"No."

"Will you still be nice to me?"

"My dear child, you are my guest. Come and go when and where you will. Omar is yours so long as you stay, and when you depart in triumph, leaving me a broken, discredited wretch, I shall stand on the dock and wave you a bon voyage. Now it's bedtime for my 'boys,' since we rise at 5 o'clock."

"Heavens! Five! Why, the sun isn't up at that time!"

"The sun shines very little here; that's why we want you to stay at Omar. I wish we might also keep Miss Natalie."

When the callers had gone Eliza told Natalie and Dan:

"He took it so nicely that I feel more ashamed than ever. One would think he didn't care at all. Do you suppose he does?"

"There's no denying that you appeared at an unfortunate time," said her brother.

"Why?"

"I won't act against my convictions," Eliza declared firmly, "even if it means calamity to everybody."

Natalie spoke for the first time, her voice tuned to a pitch of feeling that contrasted oddly with their conversational tones.

"If you hurt my Irish prince," she said, "I shall hate you as long as I live."

Gordon Shows His Teeth.

His experiment in luring the previous summer of bringing his richest stockholders north had been a great success. They had come ostensibly at his expense and, once on the ground, had allowed themselves to be fairly hypnotized.

He entertained them on a scale that was almost embarrassing, and when they returned to their homes they outdid one another in their praise of the financial genius who was leading them to the promised land of profits and preferred stock. As a matter of course they one and all advised their friends to buy, vouching for the fabulous richness of Hope Consolidated, and, since their statements were backed by a personal examination of the property, subscriptions came pouring in.

All in all, the excursion had proved so profitable that Gordon had arranged for another, designed to accommodate the investors and promising "prospects." Preparations for their welcome were under way when Natalie arrived.

The girl and her mother talked late that evening, and Gordon saw on the following morning that Gloria at least had passed a trying night, but he gave himself no uneasiness. Emotional storms were not unusual. He always disregarded them as far as possible, and usually they passed off quietly. During breakfast he informed them:

"I received a letter from Miss Golden, in yesterday's mail. She is to be one of the new party."

"Did you invite her to return this summer?" Mrs. Gerard inquired.

"Yes."

"I remember her very well," said Natalie—"too well, in fact. I thought her very bold."

"She is one of our largest investors, and she writes she would enjoy spending a fortnight here after the others go back."

"Will you allow it?"

"Allow it! My dear Gloria, I can't possibly refuse. In fact, it would be the height of inhospitality not to urge her to do so. She is welcome to stay as long as she chooses, for these quarters are as much hers as ours. I hope you will be nice to her."

Mrs. Gerard made no answer, but later in the morning sought Gordon in his private office.

"I preferred not to discuss the Golden woman before Natalie," she explained coldly. "But—you don't really intend to have her here, do you?"

An eminent electrician has figured out the horsepower of a lightning flash. The amount of light given by a single lightning flash is sufficient to illuminate an area two miles square, with an average illumination of one candle. To produce such an illumination, he estimates, the expenditure of 13,000-horsepower for one second would be required.

Music gives expression to every human emotion. All that is happy and beautiful in life, has been expressed in music.

MODERN SURGERY.

Some Wonderful Achievements In the Battle Zones.

Modern surgery dates from the introduction of anaesthetics. It is not easy nowadays to realize the horrors of hospital practice, when every movement of the surgeon's knife severed the patient's soul as well as his body. Prof. George Wilson, the second patient on whom the famous Syme performed his operation of amputation at the ankle-joint (first carried out in 1842), has left on record his emotions during the ordeal.

"During the operation," wrote Wilson, "I watched all the surgeons did with a fascinated curiosity. Of the agony it occasioned I will say nothing. Suffering so great as I underwent cannot be expressed in words, and thus, fortunately, cannot be recalled. The particular pangs are now forgotten; but the black whirlwind of emotion, the horror of great darkness, and the sense of dissection by God and man, bordering close on despair, which swept through my mind and overwhelmed my heart, I can never forget however gladly I would do so."

Time was torture then, and the long, deliberate operations of to-day were impracticable.

If the hospital was a torture-chamber then, the battlefield was an inferno. The visitor to the scene of a great action (so we are told by one who went over the stricken field of Solferino) had an illusion of being on the seashore; the miserable series of the wounded resembled the rhythmic clamor of waves; there was a salt tang in the air from the blood that had been poured out. The progress of the surgeons, always far too few, was marked by the breaking out here and there of dismal wailing. War has been purged of half its horror by the invention of anaesthetics and of more than half its destructiveness of life by the aseptic technique which prevents infection, and has put an end to the "hospital diseases" that so puzzled the pre-Listerian practitioners. some of them actually proposed the periodical destruction of hospital buildings as a heroic remedy.

To-day the surgeon can carry out the most complicated example of "reconstructive surgery" with the deliberate carefulness of a chess-player, and he can be sure that the wounds will heal healthily without matter forming to destroy his artistic handiwork. And the present war has so vastly increased his opportunities and experience that he can now accomplish feats of physical reconstruction that were utterly undreamed of in peace time. Nobody who knows the progress made by surgery on every scientific front in the last nine years is likely to challenge the saying of a famous military surgeon: "There is something to be said for a great war, after all. A century of peace-time practice could hardly have told us what we now know—and our new knowledge may in the end enable us to save more lives than the war has cost us!"

The transplanting of skin, flesh and bone—often contributed by others—is the new method which most amazes the lay mind. In one military hospital there is a patient whose defective hand is made good by bone borrowed from three comrades. The repair of shattered and dehumanized faces is another crowd-compelling wonder. But the making of new joints, the replacing and re-education of nerves, and, above all, the new idea of a useful stump, though less easily explained, are even more wonderful. The last-named advance, which is mainly due to the Italian surgeons, is nothing less than a revolution in amputation. It is no longer a question of preserving a mere stump—every bit of muscle and sinew which can be kept is now utilized as motive powers for the movable parts of wonderfully designed artificial limbs. As a wounded soldier told me the other day: "Why, I can feel and think down this new leg of mine!"—Illustrated London News.

LACE ON THE CURVED EDGE

How to Overcome the Perplexing Task of Putting the Straight Material in Place.

Have you often been troubled in putting straight lace on a curved edge?

You have been if you have ever tried putting cluny, for instance, on the outside edge of a big round centerpiece.

This is an easy way to overcome the difficulty. Roll the lace in a little tight roll. Wind it tightly about the center with a stout thread. Then dip the straight edge in water to about half the width of the lace. Let it dry and you will find a piece of lace ready shaped to your liking. You see what happens is that the straight edge, being wetted, shrinks, and so can be easily adjusted to the curved edge of the centerpiece.

If you have any new table linen—or cotton, mayhap—to hem, try this method. Trim such edges as need trimming and then run them through the machine hemmer, with a fine needle, unthreaded. This will cease the hems with perfect evenness and will also punch holes through the fabric with the unthreaded needle. Then you can turn the hem back and overhand the hems through the little holes with the least expenditure of effort.

Remember in many heavy materials that must be laid in plaits and then pressed that pins can be used to fasten the plaits into position until they are pressed. Then, as you press, take out the pins and press the material into position. You can do this with less marking than basting thread heavy enough to hold the plaits makes. Of course if you want to you can use the heavy basting thread and snip it and pull it as you go along.

METAL AND COTTON THREAD

Combination Is Effective and Affords Charming Variations; Suggestions for the Needlewoman.

There is an increasing vogue for combining metal thread with silk, wool, or cotton embroidery. It is tremendously effective and capable of such charming variations. Here are some suggestions for the needleworker who is interested in the unusual.

Say, suppose, you have some "solid" work in silk, cotton or wool. You don't know how very effective it can be made by an outlining in either gold or silver thread. The idea can be further carried out by adding French knot centers to the flowers of the same.

Where the embroidery is done entirely in outline, and particularly if it be the heavy wool or cotton kind, couching in metal is a mighty successful addition. In fact, if the wool or cotton embroidery isn't already done, try couching it on with the metallic stuff and just see if it isn't vastly more decorative.

Another suggestion for introducing the metal is to "whip stitch" the other thread with it. Wool whipped on the bias, spiral effect is the most fascinating thing ever.

ATTRACTIVE COATEE OF MOLE

All the way from France comes this extremely chic coatee with gray velvet vest. With it is worn a small angular hat of mole, ornamented by silver flowers.

Narrow Ribbons on Hats.

Not only are narrow ribbons—usually half an inch to an inch wide—being used more or less in making hats for women, but on both popular-priced and expensive models gold or silver ribbons of the same widths are employed as trimmings. Either they are drawn around the crown and finished off in soft bows or streamers or they are fashioned into flowers laid flat on the brims or around the crown. These trimmings are said to be especially effective when worn on dark hats.

Arab Decorated.

King George recently decorated with the Chain of the Royal Victorian Order Prince Feisal, son of the Arab King of the Hedjaz, who distinguished himself in the Palestine campaign. The prince, who looked very striking in the Arab head dress, does not speak English and during the ceremony the conversation was carried on by means of an interpreter.

SPANISH INFLUENZA

Do Not Fear When Fighting a German or a Germ!

By Dr. M. Cook.

The cool fighter always wins and so there is no need to become panic-stricken. Avoid fear and crowds. Exercise in the fresh air and practice the three C's: A Clean Mouth, a Clean Skin and Clean Bowels. To carry off the poisons that accumulate within the body and to ward off an attack of the influenza bacillus, take a good liver regulator to move the bowels. Such a one is made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe, root of jalap, and is to be had at any drug store, and called "Pleasant Purgative Pellets."

If a bad cold develops, go to bed, wrap up well, drink freely of hot lemonade and take a hot mustard foot-bath. Have the bedroom warm but well ventilated. Obtain at the nearest drug store "Anuric Tablets" to flush the kidneys and control the pains and aches. Take an "Anuric" tablet every two hours, together with copious drinks of lemonade. If a true case of influenza, the food should be simple, such as broths, milk, buttermilk and ice-cream, but it is important that food be given regularly in order to keep up patient's strength and vitality. After the acute attack has passed, which is generally from three to seven days, the system should be built up by the use of a good iron tonic, such as "Irontic" tablets, to be obtained at some drug stores, or that well known blood-maker and herbal tonic made from roots and barks of forest trees—sold everywhere as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

AFTERNOON DRESS OF VELVET

This charming afternoon gown of navy blue velvet comes from Lady Duff Gordon. It is fastened high at the neck with an interesting array of steel buttons on the waist and the sleeves.

NO EXTREME FEATURES USED

New Fall and Winter Clothes Are Marked by a General Air of Simplicity.

In viewing the new clothes for fall and winter one is struck by the absence of extreme features, and also by the general air of simplicity displayed. Colors are quiet, browns, blues and black predominating, with here and there a demure costume carried out in gray or taupe. Even embroidery has been subdued, and although in a few cases bright-colored wool or silk is used, the general tendency is toward gray and beige, or a soft coppery red that is new and most attractive.

As inevitable as the saxon itself is the serge street frock, and its variations are many; so, while at first glance there is a slightly monotonous effect in the costuming of the women who now throng the smart restaurants and shops, a closer inspection reveals an individuality in the arrangement of certain new details of trimming, or in the cut of the neck or fashion of sleeve. To keep to the fad of using as little wool as possible there are many clever combinations of fabrics and one is inclined to feel that this rule, instead of hindering, has been an aid to the creative abilities of designers.

A "Golden" Pippen.

Sir Robert Borden had a practical illustration since his arrival in London of the cost of living. On Regent Street some fine apples in a fruit store attracted his attention and appetite. But when he found they were selling for $1 a pound he decided to leave his appetite for this luscious fruit unsatisfied until he visited Grand Pre on his return. This price, of course, was abnormal, but apples of the poorest quality cannot be purchased for less than 25 cents per pound. Eggs enter largely into the living of every person and are a fair indication of the cost of living. For the past two weeks eggs have been selling in London at $2.16 per dozen. An attempt is being made to fix the price at $1.32 per dozen, but with little success. Meat does not show such an enormous increase in cost as compared with Canadian prices, being about 50 per cent. higher without regard to quality. Bacon sold in London could not be retailed here. Practically all the hog but the tail, feet and snout is made into bacon by salting it to a degree that the unfortunate householder is paying an exorbitant price for a very inferior article. Potatoes for the past two weeks have not been obtainable in more than four-pound lots, and cost about $2.50 per bushel. A greater and cheaper supply is promised. It is estimated that the purchasing value of a pound is only seven shillings compared to pre-war prices.

HOG CHOLERA DANGER

How to Detect Disease and the Measures of Control.

Spraying to Be Effective Must Be Done at Exact Time — Have Everything In Readiness When Season Opens — Write Department of Agriculture for Up-to-Date Spray Calendar.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE symptoms of hog cholera differ somewhat according to the virulence of the virus and the resisting power of the hogs in any particular outbreak. Owing to this variation, two forms of the disease are recognised—the so-called acute form and the chronic forms.

In the acute or severe form, the hogs sicken and die quickly, appearing to be well one day and frequently dead the next. In the chronic or less severe form, the hogs may be sick for weeks before they die or get better.

When cholera enters a herd, the hogs do not all become sick at once. One or two fail to come for their feed and will be found lying down in some dark corner. On being raised up their backs will be arched, and they will shiver as with cold. They soon become thin and tucked up in the flank and stagger around when trying to walk, the hind legs being particularly weak. The eyes become inflamed and show a whitish discharge, sometimes causing the lids to stick together. When the lungs get affected there is a cough. Constipation is noticed at first, followed by diarrhoea; red and purple blotches appear on the skin of ears, belly, and inner surfaces of the legs. The temperature of the sick hogs will rise to as high as 107 degrees F. or even higher, the normal temperature of healthy animals being 101 to 104 degrees F.

Methods of Spreading.

So far as known, the virus of hog cholera will not propagate outside the body of the hog. As already stated, the virus is given off in large quantities in the urine and faecal discharges of sick hogs. Anything that gets contaminated with these discharges is liable to spread the disease to healthy hogs that come in contact with it. Consequently, boxes, wagons, and cars in which sick animals are shipped, are potent sources for spreading the disease. The pens and yards in which sick animals have run get heavily contaminated, so that anyone walking over the same get their shoes and clothes contaminated, and may carry the disease to other herds subsequently visited.

Prevention and Treatment.

From what has been said above regarding the way the disease is spread, it will at once be seen that one way to keep the disease from a healthy herd is to take all steps necessary to prevent materials contaminated by sick hogs from coming in contact with the healthy herd.

In Canada (by order of the Veterinary Director-General)—If by any chance the disease gains entrance to a herd anywhere in Canada, the laws of the Dominion require that a veterinary inspector be notified without delay. Failure to make this notification means loss of compensation for animals slaughtered under the act, and liability to a heavy fine.—Prof. D. H. Jones, O. A. College, Guelph.

Order Everything Early.

Spraying is something that cannot wait. It must be done at a definite time. Failure to do it then means failure to get clean fruit. Experience shows there is no one factor so important in obtaining a good crop as spraying. Therefore apply business-like forethought to it. Estimate at once how much material you will need and place your order for this not later than March 1st with definite instructions to have it shipped to you by the first week in April.

If you have to purchase a new outfit find out the make you think best and have it shipped just as soon as possible. Run no risk of its not being on hand when required. If the old outfit is to be used do not fail to overhaul and test it out in March or early April. Don't leave it until the first day of spraying. If you have to send it away to be repaired remember that many others will be doing the same and if you postpone sending until April you will in the rush of work have to wait your turn and may not get it back until after spraying has begun. This often happens.

What discourages and annoys you most when spraying? Is it not delays and poor pressure? With proper foresight and a little knowledge of the mechanism of your engine and pump you can in a large measure prevent this annoyance, discouragement and loss of time and money; so learn to do it now. If you can't do it as well as possible, pack your own pump and clean your own engine. If, however, you have no mechanical ability, get a handy man to help you. Work with him yourself to learn all you can.

Be determined that this year you will do your spraying right, that you will have a good working outfit with no leakages, good long hose firmly attached to your pump, a good spray gun, plenty of material, a spray calendar to guide you and everything ready to start the first day the spraying season opens.

If you do your part the spray will do its part, and the result will be a clean crop. You cannot give too much thought to about your spraying. Nothing about the orchard pays so well as in efficient spraying. You can't do it properly unless you are ready and follow directions carefully.—L. Caesar, B.S.A., O. A. College, Guelph.

Opposed to the Highway.

At a largely-attended meeting of the St. Mary's Farmers' Club a debate was held, "Resolved, that the provincial highway would be detrimental to the best interests of the farmers." The affirmative was upheld by Mr. H. B. Webster and the negative by Mr. Jos. Mountain. The decision was given in favor of the affirmative, many of the members present expressing themselves as opposed to the movement, on the ground that it is a capitalistic venture calculated to promote the interests of cement men and contractors more than the farming community, who would be called upon to contribute to its support.

Farms Wanted for Soldier Settlers

Powers are proposed to be granted at the approaching session of Parliament to The Soldier Settlement Board of Canada to purchase lands to be resold to qualified returned soldiers settling on land. In the case of undeveloped lands the Board will be granted powers of forced purchase at prices judicially determined.

To enable soldiers to locate in any district in Ontario that they wish, the Advisory Board for the Province of Ontario desire to have filed with them a full description and lowest cash prices on a small number of select farms in each district of the Province, available for purchase.

The public are hereby informed that this land is for returned soldiers, and no tenders to sell are requested except for land of good quality and location, and reasonable value, making possible the success of the soldier as a farmer. The purchase price in all cases will be fixed by the Board after the land has been inspected and valued.

The information received will be treated as confidential. No commission will be charged or paid. No offer to sell will be binding on the person offering unless a sale is effected, and no obligation will be on the Board to accept any offer.

If application from a returned soldier be received for a farm listed with the Board, a valuation for such farm may be at once made by the Board and, if approved, negotiations may be entered into for the purchase and sale thereof. An approved list is desired for each district of Ontario.

MEN NEEDED ON FARMS

NO ERA OF CHEAP FOOD COMING IN NEAR FUTURE.

Many Inducements for Men Who Are Thinking of Returning to Land —The Increase of Competition From Outside Makes It Necessary to Have Expert Workers.

Since it is hardly to be expected that the era of cheap food will return within the lifetime of any person now old enough to undertake the business of farming there is one reason the less for hesitating to decide on a return to the land by such persons as have taken other work in preference to farming during the past four years. The natural increase in the urban population, as compared with that of the rural districts has been sufficient within the above period to ensure a steady demand for farm products, even if those farmers who gave up their old occupation to engage in quicker cash producing work should all return to the land.

Promise of a further inducement to return to the land exists in the possibility of a reduction of the cost of manufactured materials such as clothing, farm machinery and all other articles that are used to an even greater extent by country people than by dwellers in the cities; in fact this possibility is more than a probability, if, in the near future, the labor supply of the country is not distributed with better regard for the necessity for food production. In addition to the need of restoring a balance between production and present home consumption of foods, there is the matter of some national indebtedness to be considered, and as this will necessitate increased production in all lines of industry, not only must food be provided for a large force of workers in other lines than agriculture, but in common reason, full advantage must be taken of our agricultural resources in providing material for meeting the debt. Further, there is the shifting of the trade balance to our favor, to be considered, and this will require even greater effort in crop production as the best prospect for acquiring a money balance in our favor occurs in the existing and promised demand for foodstuffs in other countries of the world.

What is most needed to ensure the needed increase in production of farm crops is the return to farming of such persons as are experienced in the work. Employers of labor in all industries seem to be satisfied that the reconstruction period will bring them bigger business almost immediately, and it would not be desirable to reduce their opportunities for expansion by removing from their reach such labor as they might employ to better advantage than could the farmer. In the new start in the world's race, Canada has a good position, but it must be remembered that she is in senior company, and must expect strong competition, therefore it is necessary that every step shall count, and to ensure such running, every individual must be engaged in the line of work for which he is best adapted.

As regards the farming industry the existence of competition for command of the world's markets must be seriously considered, and not only a thorough knowledge of general farm practice will be required in the individual, but his efforts must be applied in the best direction. This matter of direction of his efforts has already been well thought out as regards the possibilities for disposal of the various farm products, and the fact that the great demand of the world will be for live stock and live stock products has been fully established. It is for the practical farmers and stockmen to decide on the best methods of production in that line, also it is for them to see to it, individually and collectively, that there is no waste effort in this direction, such as attempts to raise stock in districts unsuited to the purpose, while other districts, well suited for such work, are neglected.

For increased production of cattle and especially dairy cattle, there is a great opportunity in the area of the farms already settled in the eastern part of Canada, to say nothing of the unoccupied areas where beef cattle could be ranged for a considerable portion of the year. Surveys made of Northern Ontario alone have shown considerable areas suited to sheep farming, and as the demand for wool is due to continue, almost at the war-level for years to come, that demand together with the demand for mutton, will make it possible effort to encourage sheep raising well worth while.

The Experimental Union.

An institution of as great importance to the advance of the Agricultural interests of this country as any in existence is the Ontario Agricultural and Experimenti Union of practical farmers. Co-operative experiments in the growing of farm crops with regard to variety of seed used, the use of commercial fertilizers, the importance of the eradication of weeds and the effect of sowings of different degrees of thickness, have revealed facts in findings that have been responsible for the introduction of agricultural practices responsible for a tremendous economy in past years, and the work continues steadily to produce desired effects. The importance attached to this work by those who have been actuated to calculate its results is shown in the honor extended to Dr. C. A. Zavitz of the Ontario Agricultural College, who is mainly responsible for its continuance by the University of Toronto.

In spite of the great scarcity of labor, farmers to the number of 3,631 conducted co-operative experiments on their own farms in the past year.

Grain at Lakes Head.

The elevators at Duluth and Superior on Jan. 8, were holding 19,000 bushels of rye, 3,139,000 bushels of oats, 865,000 bushels of barley and 987,000 bushels of flax, making a total of 20,995,000 bushels. On the same date last year stocks of all kinds of grain were only 1,251,469 bushels. As the rate grain is pouring into the upper lake ports all the elevator room will soon be taken, and boats will be wanted to take storage cargoes for spring delivery.

At Fort William on the same date there were 16,696,234 bushels of wheat in store as compared with 5,932,703 on Jan. 8th last year.

Ayrshire Milk Records.

Maple Leaf Jean, an Ayrshire cow, owned by Gilbert McMillan, Huntingdon, as a four-year-old, has given 12,366 lbs. milk with 472 lbs. fat. Primrose of Orkney 4th, owned by Harmon McPherson, Copetown, in the three-year-old class, gave 8,309 lbs. milk with 387 lbs. fat. An extraordinarily good record stands to the credit of Scottish Victoria 2nd, owned by John McKee, Norwich. This heifer, as a two-year-old, in 312 days, gave 9,016 lbs. milk with 366 lbs. fat.

While no attempt has as yet been reported since the beginning of the armistice to unload German-made goods in Canada, it is regarded as quite likely that some cleverly disguised plans for doing this are under way. It is believed that German agents are still very busy at this line, and the American Defence Society has accoordingly issued the following: "The subtle agents of Germany are here to place German goods on the market, and ultimately to undersell our own manufacturers. We have fought Germany on land and sea, and now have to fight her at home. The cheap goods from Germany are made at slave's wages. We must protect our own industries in order to give employment to our returned soldiers."
